

Wine

An interesting tale about a small fruit that has made its way all over the world...been lost & found been adopted and renamed--sometimes investigated by scientists using DNA. It is a story that many of us have grown to love and continue to pursue understanding how it becomes what it is during a most remarkable journey and how a few (extremely insane individuals) examine this phenomenon in great detail and attempt to know as much about dirt, climate, fermentation, aging, vintage and a host of other portions of estoric information. I am one of those people. Sante.

Some information about some of the wines that may not be household names....yet.

Godello (also known in Portugal as Verdelho) is a chardonnay-like variety that hails from the northwest of Spain. It is suprisingly well structured, with balanced acidity and tends to pair better with a variety of fare than chardonnay.

Fiano is a thick-skinned variety that offers very small amounts of juice from the grape which caused vintners to plant better yielding varieties. This wine is typical of Sicily and Campania and must comprise 85% of the indigenous grape.

Tocai Friuliano, typical of the northeast region in Italy, is a "rounder" wine with great versatility. Recently, Hungary went to court to protect the name "tokaji"; now, many producers are simply calling it friuliano. Trousseau Gris is one of the new "nerd" wines in the Sommelier world. Also known as Grey Riesling, this light body, light acid white is an ideal starter wine. It is gaining notoriety all over the world which will certainly impact the number of producers to give it a shot.

Savagnin hails from the Jura region (in France)--another "nerd" wine that in some areas must age miminally for 6 years. This wine is sherry-like, with forward nuttiness and creaminess that is often mistaken with the wine being "off."

Greco is an Italian offering that originated in Greece; it can be rich and fruity and is a standard house wine in southwest Italy. Gruner Veltliner is Austria's most produced grape. It is crisp, light with pleasant spice. It is very fun to say.

Albarino (or Alvarinho in neighboring Portugal) is the queen of white wine in Galicia. Fruit forward, creamy and medium body are the prototypical characteristics. Jacquere is the Savoie's (France) primary commodity. They tend to be light, dry with good acid. Vermintino, in some circles is thought to be related to Malvasia. It flourishes in Sardinia and Corsica but also is keen on the western Italian regions. It is often blended, but when comprised entirely of the variety, it tends to be reminiscent of the coast: light, mild, good acid, salinity. Ideal for seafood courses. Verdejo originates in the Rueda (central Spain) but has found itself thriving in neighboring regions. Although it is fuller-bodied and rich it has a crispness and a creamy texture that in my opinion differentiates it from most any othe white variety.

This area is reserved for those grapes that truly know their roots. Wine has long since been a hot commodity that conquering generals stole among other things; replanted in their local vineyards and often renamed. You'll also find some fun combinations of varietals in here. Some that are difficult to pronounce. But they are fun to try and enjoy with food and conversation...maybe you might find a new variety that becomes your favorite. Experience from the vines perspective...you won't need a passport for this journey either.

Those varieties that are arguably the MOST important to the growth of the wine industry as a whole. It is in this category where many of the wineries who have made their way "in" the industry cut their teeth. For many of them, they made a noteworthy wine and maintained their focus on the continued excellence of the wine instead of branching out into unknown spaces and losing the intensity that put them "at the table" in the first place. Getting back to the basics but nothing "basic" in their quality.

More geeky facts about some of the wines that may be off the beaten path...

Bobal is another indigenous wine of Spain. It tends to be rich in color and flavor as well as high in acidity which makes this wine an excellent food companion. Corvina is one of the principles in valpolicella wines. This medium-bodied type tends to be tart, cherry and almond flavored. Dolcetto "little sweet one" grows primarily in Italy's Piedmont region. The fruit is very forward but not overwhelming; the wines are rich and easy to enjoy. Pinot Meunier is one of the three grapes allowable in Champagne; however, it is exceptional on its own as a still wine. I like to describe it as a creamier pinot with various layers of signature flavors. Counoise is another "nerd" variety. Typically a rhone variety used to blend the Chateau neuf du Pape wine. Alone it is peppery, soft fruit, earthy with great acid. Gamay is the grape that put Beaujolais on the map. However, don't hold that against it. The branding of the "Nouveau" has bastardized this variety. This wine is zippy, with great rustic fruit and low tannin. This is an amazing shift for those who are tired of Pinot noir. Mencia is the red variety originated from Bierzo, Spain. It has remained relatively obscure until only recently. It is floral, earthy with plum and cherry flavors, rustic and delicious. Thought to be a distant cousin to Cabernet Franc but the jury is still out... Carignan, (aka Mazuelo, Samsó, Carinena) is argued to derive somewhere on the France/Spain border. Big and bold with aggressive tannin and high alcohol that produces spicy and robust black fruit wines. It is often blended with softer varieties that are found in Priorat. Zinfandel is probably the most recognizable grape on this list. Often the "spicy" style that intrigues the palate. Many debate that it is Primitivo or a derivative of the variety but without question is a "go to" grape: typically higher in alcohol, with loads of ripe fruit and extra peppery spice. Monastrell (also Mourvedre & Mataro) is a common field variety not notable in the Rhone--it is also an essential blending grape in Spain, the lead in Tempier Bandol and of late, one of the "new" players in New World activity. In the Canary Islands, look to its indigenous variety, Listan Negro, a volcanic derived varietal that is as complex as it is versatile--producing medium-acid, medium bodied, smoky, easy going wines that are great with seafood and rich meats. Schioppettino is the nearly extinct red wine hailing from Friuli that is making its way back on the scene. Full bodied without being heavy, earthy, with balance and finesse...one of my new favorite wines. Another new (yet old) Italian varietal on the scene is Frappato--of Sicilian decent thought to be a cousin of Sangiovese--charming & polished reminiscent of a more earthy & full-figured Pinot Noir.
